Chiles loses it

A 250 – word article

LOST property workers for London Underground believe they may have found the personality of the ITV presenter Adrian Chiles.

It would appear Chiles lost his personality in 1994 whilst on a tube journey to the BBC for a TV presenting job interview, leaving viewers wondering how he was ever offered the position.

Amazingly Chiles has hosted many shows since his stint on working lunch, becoming a regular TV personality despite not having a personality, one of the main criteria's, you would think, for a presenting job.

The personality remains in London Undergrounds lost property office until Chiles can build up enough enthusiasm to collect it.

The manager of the lost property department told us how they acquired this lost item; “It was handed in to us by a tramp, he found it on the tube in a Tesco bag. He said he was going to throw it in the bin as it looked so dull and boring but he thought he may as well give it to lost property, someone might claim it if they were desperate.”

ITV, Chiles' current employers, were unavailable for comment when asked why they commissioned Adrian as a television presenter even though he had carelessly mislaid his personality.

Former employers, the BBC, told us they liked Chiles but couldn't keep him working on the one show as his 'slow' manor of presenting was ineffective on a show that has to cram one hundred articles into a thirty minute time slot.
